"Some waltz, some draw, some fathom the abyss of metaphysics; others are content with singing"

This year would have been incomplete without Esther, Teddy and Annie. Seniors of last year, they came back to us with their store of experience and have helped us over many difficult places. We envied Teddy and Esther their "scrub faculty" privileges and their good times—dates, dinner parties, etc. The class of '19 is justly proud of this happy trio of artists.

Editorial Poem

Should you ask me whence these stories,
Whence these pictures, and these drawings,
I should answer, I should tell you,
From the toil and work of Peace girls,
From the never ending labor
Of the Staff of Nineteen-Nineteen.
Ye who sometimes in your musings
Of your youth the long past school time,
Dream with tenderness of friendships,
And old scenes so well remembered,
Stay and read our rude descriptions
Of the happy life of Peace girls.

*"She is beautiful, therefore to be wooed;

"Chunk" will surely be missed for countless numbers of reasons: most, because she has been so faithful to old Peace throughout all these years (?). Sweet, winsome, womanly, beautiful - what more could any mortal desire! The big question now is, will she be a Pi Kappa Alpha, Kappa Sigma, or Sigma Nu sister? And then - well, we can see only one goal for "Chunk," and we will let you guess that.

As President of the Student Body, she has done wonders; as a member she has done her duty, and yet has taken her fun where she found it. We all love her and she leaves a vacancy here that can scarcely be filled.

It doesn't seem quite fair for such an amazing amount of knowledge to be compressed within the cerebrum of one single human being, when it might be distributed over a dozen or more people. The gods have showered gifts upon her. Music, painting, "expression" (written and spoken), a keen sense of humor, and other talents too numerous to mention. Her wondrous bronze tresses rival Psyche's, and we wonder how long ere a certain "god" will worship eternally at her shrine.

Senior Class History

One night at Peace, twelve undignified Seniors were holding a midnight feast in a room on the Hall of Fame. In the center of the circle was a dish of boiling fudge, upon which were fastened the eyes of the happy dozen. It was nearing the time of commencement and this was our last Senior meeting. How could we make it a happy one?

One of our number, whom we had always loved and looked up to, suggested that the History of our class be told. "But how," you might ask, "could it be interesting to rehearse such a history amongst a crowd already so familiar with it?" Well, for this reason, that the class of 1919 has had the most unusual history in the annals of Peace. We are completing our school life under conditions never before faced by any class of this school. And the year 1919, we are told, will witness most remarkable changes in the habits and lives of people all over the world.

At this suggestion, another girl arose and spoke as follows: "Girls, do you remember that in 1914 only one of our number here was brave enough to enter the Freshman class? But, like those of us who entered later, she was a worker from the beginning, and after being thoroughly 'salted', she conquered; and in 1915 entered her Sophomore year. Here she found five other members waiting for her. How wise we felt that year when we solved the problems of Math, and Science of Art and English. And in the same year we became the famous athletes of Peace.

"But listen! girls, will you ever forget the year 1917, when we were all Jolly Juniors together? And then we were joined by eleven new girls. This indeed, was a jolly class. With unwavering courage, we met obstacles in class and in social life. Will you ever forget how glad we were when we passed our examinations and were given our Junior privileges? Oh, how we enjoyed going shopping unchaperoned!

"In the fall of 1918, we twelve once more entered the gates of Peace and enrolled as stately Seniors. But we were surprised to find that we were not so dignified as we had been told we should be. How we enjoyed the feeling of being full-fledged Seniors. But you know, five of our number did not return, and, oh, how we have missed them!

"Do you remember that we had been here only three weeks of this last year, when we were suddenly bundled up and sent home on account of the Influenza?

Shall we ever forget those days? While we were at home, each did what she could to nurse the sick in her town. And at the end of a month's time we returned, ready for work again.

"We love to think of the quarantine. In spite of some hardships, we really enjoyed it.

"After Christmas we all had the 'Flu', and such excitement had never before been witnessed at Peace.

"With the warm spring, came the renewal of all our former pleasures. There were parties galore, and girls, will you ever forget those State College receptions? And do you remember those exciting basketball games and the serenades afterwards? The feeling of being well again and out of quarantine brightened every heart and lightened every burden.

"Girls, may we never forget each other, after we leave dear old Peace; and let us close this our last feast, with a cheer for the old Class of '19!"

Then each Senior forgot that she was at a midnight feast and gave a loud cheer to the girl who had reminded her of the happy years spent here. The feast was over and the little group stole softly to their several rooms.

And now, with faces aglow with excitement, and hearts light with hope for our future, we leave dear old Peace, hoping that by our lives here we have made Peace a better place; and that we are starting a new and better life made possible by the knowledge we have gained here. We are stepping into a new world; a world alive with new and better opportunities for our American womanhood to prove its value to humanity. With this noble aim in view, we resign to the class of 1920, our honored position as Seniors.

Historian

Senior Class Prophecy of 1919

I am the fairy Happiness, and, do you know I spend much of my time with the Peace Institute Class of 1919? I'm going to make a call on all of them now. If you would like to go, jump up, and in my invisible aeroplane we'll fly!

There now, see the tall buildings? This is New York. I'll wave my magic wand and we will slowly descend until our aeroplane is just opposite a window. Look in, and can you believe it, there sits our friend Ethel Buffalo, lecturing on Chaucer to Columbia students. Of course, you always knew she had the ability. Not very far on I'll stop again, and you may see Lucille Buchanan. In spite of the fact that she is married, she prefers to earn her own way, so she is private secretary to the mayor. I don't blame her at all, I tell you it is humiliating for a woman to have to beg a man for her pin money.

And quick! look in there! Do you recognize little Mary Medlin? She is a dear, isn't she? Every week, you may see a girl resembling Mary on the cover of some leading magazine. You see she poses for Harrison Fisher and thoroughly enjoys eating candy, when he is not painting that pretty little mouth of hers.

No wonder you ask who that girl is. She is quite the most striking person I have ever seen. Why, Mademoiselle Jeanie Smythe has a reputation that Lady Duff Gordon envies with all her heart! Mademoiselle Smythe designs creations for all the princesses of Europe and her skill is a thing to marvel at.

Why, dear traveler, don't get so excited! It is only the governor of the State! Oh, I see! You recognize her as your former friend, Mary Reed Buchanan! Have you heard how she has taken personal command of the militia, and how it was largely through her efforts that suffrage was granted to women. Speaking of suffrage reminds me of Lenoir Mercer. Do you know that child, with a large placard on her back, "Votes for Women" besieged the White House. Then she decided that she cared more for one certain person than she did for votes, so now she lives on Riverside Drive, in the coziest little apartment in the world. I just love to go there, and you would too.

Do you remember her "Roomy," Hattie May Morisey? Of course you do. Well, for a while all her attention was directed towards Baltimore, but she soon tired of Eastern culture, and the dear child sought the western plains and there found happiness and love.

I wish we had time to stop at the opera, because there you could hear the world famous soprano, Florence Phillips. She has made quite a reputation for Peace Institute and it is rumored that she has been offered a contract to play opposite Eugene O'Brien in the movies. My, wouldn't you like to have that chance?

Now let us fly quickly to the orange groves of the south. Look! There if you please, stands Isabelle Bowen directing fruit packers. Her husband looks on rather timidly and agrees with Isabelle in word and gesture. Independent, that's Isabelle all over!

There on the beach, with her round of cavaliers, sits Julia Young. Charming and beautiful still, she has the same attraction for the opposite sex.

In the distance, you can discern a large boat. Now we are quite near. It is a yacht. Our aeroplane is a magic one and I'm hungry, so let us descend and take dinner with the passengers. First, take a look at the captain and, oh, my heavens! it is a woman! It is Lillian Purvis. Quiet little Lillian Purvis, who would ever think of your being the captain of a ship? But we must remember that in 1929, on a magic airship anything is possible.

No matter how much I should like to stay, I must go on. Happiness has so much ground to cover. Take Mrs. Haskins, for instance. She has eleven children, three of them have measles, the dog has hurt his foot, and the cat drank up the morning milk. So I'm going there to play with those blessed kids while she cleans up the house for some expected guests.

MARY S. STEELE,

Prophet.

of the Class of 1919*

STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA,)

Peace Institute, June 4, 1919.

The class of 1919 of Peace Institute, realizing that it will soon be obliged to leave these walls, and to enter upon a new life, and being in possession of certain property and effects, of which it wishes to dispose before departing, has drawn up this document.

We, the class of 1919, being of sound mind and body (that is to say, as sound as could be expected, considering our past four years of mental contortions) do now and hereby declare and publish this final disposition of our property, in manner and form following: to wit:

ITEM I. To Miss Kuhns, our devoted class teacher, we leave the sincere love and devotion of every member of the class.

ITEM II. To the Juniors, the commendable spirit which the members of our class have shown in the quarterly English conferences. We hope the class of 1920 will exhibit a like spirit, so that our departure will be less hard to bear.

ITEM III. In brief, we leave all our Senior privileges to the prospective Senior class. If these privileges are found too great(?) a burden for said class, they may be preserved for some future class, who, not realizing what they ask, want privileges in their Junior year.

ITEM IV. To the successors of the present Junior class, we leave the same privileges that we have given the incoming Seniors—that of chaperoning, and assuming the Senior dignity while doing so.

ITEM V. To the Freshman class we will the members of the faculty, with the assurance that they will make their next years' Sophomores' lives weary with overstudying. They surely did map out a sufficient amount of work for us, and we are very sure that unless some miraculous change takes place in them, they will be quite as thoughtful of future classes.

ITEM VI. We hereby appoint our president, Miss Mary Owen Graham, as lawful executrix to all intents and purposes, to execute this our Last Will and Testament and every part and clause thereof—hereby revoking and declaring void all other Wills and Testaments heretofore by us made.

FLORENCE E. PHILLIPS.

Senior Class Poem

We are going, Oh my class-mates,
On a long and distant journey
Through the life which lies before us,
Where we each may find enrichment,
Of ambitions, the fulfilment.
To you girls who follow after
To your guardianship we leave you
What we love our Alma Mater.
You must love her as we love her
And you must be worthy of her,
Gain through her, life's preparation,
And through her that inspiration
Which she gives to those who love her.

We are going, Oh my class-mates,
For our school days here are over.
Many summers, many winters
Shall return; but ne'er shall bring us
Back to this we leave, now finished,
But our thoughts shall be returning,
And our hearts be often yearning
For these unforgotten schooldays,
For the days when we were Peace-girls.

History of the Junior Class

For three years, as homesick Freshmen, Wise Sophs, and Jolly Juniors, we have experienced together the joys and sorrows of school life. Now that we have passed through these successive stages, we are ready to become dignified Seniors.

In our Freshman year, there were only six of us, but each year our number has increased until now we have a class of sixteen members. All of us are North Carolinians, and this has made us love each other all the more. We have out-stripped all other classes, not only in gaining members, but also in obtaining honors. We have the honor of claiming three members of the Student council, four members of the Editorial Staff, the president and the vice-president of the Athletic Association, the secretaries of both Societies, the president and the secretary of the Y. W. C. A., five members of the Y. W. C. A. Cabinet, three members of the Church Choir, the secretary of the Choral Club, and, last but by no means last, Miss McLelland, the lady principal, as our class teacher. In addition to these honors in our midst are found the prettiest girl in school, the most optimistic, the most attractive and the best-all-round.

To be frank, our record has not been a continuous succession of victories, yet many times we have been able to say with Caesar "Veni, vidi, vici." We have struggled through chemistry with the courage of a Lyon, and through "Trig" and Horace with the tenacity of Kuhns. We have gone into the depths of our psyches with Miss Womble. We have battled with Shelley, Keats, and Browning until we would think ourselves possessing some poetic talent, did not Miss Ingraham remind us that "Poeta nascitur, non fit."

This year has given us many things to be proud of—Junior privileges, for instance. These were given to us at the beginning of the year, but the quarantine prevented us from deriving any benefits from them until after Christmas. We are especially proud of these privileges because no previous Juniors have received such privileges as we are the proud possessors of. We have not only the privilege of going down town without a teacher but also the much coveted privilege of chaperoning our under classmen. How dignified it makes us feel!

As Freshmen, Sophs, and Juniors, we have encountered many difficulties in our work, and as Seniors we expect to encounter still others. However, with Miss McLelland as our guide and with our motto as an incentive, we hope to succeed and bring glory to our school.

Junior Poem

We're Juniors now— but just ahead the goal is—
One year—a step in life— then end with college.
Three years we've toiled, and each year watched departing
A Senior Class, with dignity and knowledge.
Oft we have envied them, but now before us
The same path lies—fair, yet with labor in it,
Now shall we gain the goal as brave and faithful
As those who leave to us the right to win it?
Ambition called us on—In her fleet footsteps
We've followed till the Gate we've almost spied
That leads into the world— But have we courage
To turn the key called "work" and fling it wide?
Oh, Alma Mater, in the year that's coming
May the compass-needle of our souls still be
True to the north star of a great ambition,
Ever upholding Ideals taught by thee.

Freshman Poem

*I sing a song of "Freshies,"
Of trouble, toil and woe
And all the other hardships
Which "Freshies" undergo
I sing of that long, awful night
Away from home and dad
And the pangs of wanting mama
Which only (:) Freshies had.
I sing of one eventful night
Which it is death to tell,
We joined the school societies —
The old girls gave us—well,
I sing of bowing to the rules
Of "old girls," proctors, deans
And only green, green "Freshies"
Know rightly what that means.
I could name many others,
Could tell them by the score—
But each has one redemption,

A Psalm of Life

(With the most humble apologies to Longfellow)

What the heart of the Peace girl said to the Psalmist

*Tell me not in joyful numbers,
Exams are just an empty dream!
For the girl is "flunked" that slumbers,
And tests are not what they seem.
Not enjoyment, just more sorrow,
Is our destined end or way,
Just to study that tomorrow,
We may catch up with to-day.
Exams are long, and Time is fleeting
And our hearts, tho' stout and brave,
Still like muffled drums are beating
Funeral marches to Math's grave.
Grades of bright girls all remind us,
We can't make our bad marks cease,
And departing, leave behind us,
"Nineties" on the books of Peace.
"Nineties," that perhaps another,
Sailing o'er school's solemn main,
Always writing to that brother(?)
Seeing, shall take heart again.
Let us then be up and doing,
At the very crack of day;
Still reciting, still pursuing,
Learn exams are never play.*

Peace

*There was a remarkable show
With black pictures all in a row.
We sat by the door
To hear Mistress Moore
Tell the crowd all our faults, don't you know.*

*There was a round moon in scene
Which was a'er the hilltop green - (We 'spose it was green)
Then sweet lady fair
Who held babe in air
Next to Maw and Paw in a dream.*

*There was an old man, and thick smoke
With dreams coming out, t'aint no joke,
A picture that slants
Of a giddy, gay dance,
Oh, what beauty into us did soak.*

*Our toes and our pride were quite flat,
As an each of our pictures, she sat,
Blushes were free
And shaky were we
As they were discussed (jist cussed) by that CAT!!!*

*The medal to Miss Bowen went
First prize to Miss Holding was sent
Miss Foy, Oh! do look!
Second prize she took!
In that wonderful art event.*

The Daffodil Girl

The door of the long, low room opened softly to admit two little golden haired girls clad in long white gowns. The birch logs crackled and showers of sparks floated away up the chimney. The blue flames caught the high lights on the red apples heaped high in a big basket. Toward this basket the two little figures tip-toed. Beside it they stopped, and, peering into the shadowy corner, called softly, "Grandpa, Grandpa!" As there was no answer, they carefully selected the two biggest apples they could find, and dropped on the deep, glossy bearskin lying in front of the hearth.

A smothered yawn from the corner brought both yellow heads around with a jerk, and, after assuring themselves that the occupant of the big chair was awake, Nancy and Mary bounded lightly to its side. The kindly brown eyes lighted with pleasure, and the thin lips parted in a humorous smile, as the silvery haired old man pinched their rosy cheeks.

"I just wonder what these two young ladies want, now?" he asked, slightly raising his grey brows.

Nancy reached up one chubby hand, and softly patted the silver hair. "Grandpa, I love you," she whispered.

"We want a story, Grandpa, a story about a nice brave soldier like you used to be." Mary smilingly perched herself on the chair arm as she made her request. "Grandma's in the garden," she added, and the wrinkled face lighted at the bit of information.

"I want it to have a little girl, and birds, and flowers in it, too," added Nancy, as she climbed on one knee.

Grandpa tilted his head back and, gazing into the bed of glowing coals, began the story.

"It was a sunny morning in early spring. I opened my eyes, and looked straight out of a wide open window. Then I saw in the window a beautiful bowl of daffodils. With the sun shining on them they looked like lumps of gold. I wondered who had put them there.

"A door opened, and I tried to turn my head but that hurt. So I had to lie still and wait. A girl dressed in pure white with a red cross on her sleeve, came to my bedside. Until then I had not realized I was in a hospital. Then it all came back to me in a flash. I remembered one dark night—but that is another story, and I will not tell it to you until you are many years older." The thin lips were in a straight line now, and the brown eyes were no longer smiling.

"The nurse took my pulse and bandaged my shoulder," the voice continued quietly. "Then she went over to the next soldier and so around the ward. There was nothing I could do, and the hours dragged slowly. I was just a lad, you know, and usually in the spring I had been climbing cherry trees, and taking long walks across the country." The voice was cheery now.

"Poor Grandpa!" Nancy wriggled around on his knee, and, slipping both arms around his neck, kissed him softly. "You didn't have any little girl like me to come kiss you then did you? I wish I'd been there."

"Yes, I did, too." The brown eyes smiled reminiscently.

"Oh, you knew a little girl! Tell us about her too." Nancy wriggled with delight at the prospect of hearing her part of the story.

"The next morning," continued the story teller, "I was lying there thinking of home and of how the peach orchard would look, and how the flowers would smell, when a little girl with dark curls and big blue eyes came into the ward. In her arms she carried a big bunch of daffodils. She smiled at me and said, 'Bon jour, Monsieur,' and when I did not answer, she laughed and came to the side of my bed. Then she said, 'Good morning. It is so happy it makes me that you are awake this morning.'

'Oh, what a funny way to talk!' Nancy clapped her hand over her mouth, as Mary shook her head.

'Go on, please, Grandpa.' Mary requested gently.

'She filled the vase with fresh water and daffodils,' Grandpa took up his story again. 'After filling all the bowls, and smiling at each soldier, she left the ward. I felt a good deal better that day, and the time did not drag so slowly.'

'Every morning the little daffodil girl came, but she soon changed her flowers from daffodils to violets, then from violets to hyacinths, and from hyacinths to lilies-of-the-valley. By the time she began bringing lilies-of-the-valley we were very good friends. And by this time most of the other boys had been moved. I suppose she felt sorry for me, for she would tell me stories of how the fairies helped her select the flowers to bring us, and she always brought an especially lovely flower just for me.'

'One morning she came late. My shoulder was much better, and I could sit up in a chair. My chair was facing the door, and all at once I heard some one running breathlessly through the corridor. In a few moments she was flying through the door, dark curls in disorder, cheeks pink, eyes bright, and lips half open.'

Nancy clapped her hands. 'Something nice happened, I know,' she breathed softly, her own red lips parted and eyes shining expectantly.

'I asked her what had happened.'

'Oh guess!' she answered, laughing mischievously, and then hurried on, 'I find a little pigeon and its wing is broken. And I find a little paper tied to it. And I carry the little paper to the Major, and he tell me it is very important and I get a—a thing for carrying important message.'

'And she helped win the war, didn't she, Grandpa?' Nancy asked anxiously.

'Yes dear, she did.' Grandpa's answer was quietly spoken.

'And then you got well, Grandpa?' Mary was never satisfied when she was listening to stories.

'Yes, my shoulder improved rapidly, and two months after I returned to duty the armistice was signed. Then the boys were sent home as rapidly as possible. But by the time my division was to sail, I had decided to stay in France. I asked and obtained permission to remain, and so my division sailed without me. I was over there for eight years, and then, just before I sailed, I went back to the town where I had been when wounded. And then I was called home.' The mellow voice trailed away, and the brown eyes gazed into the bed of glowing coals.

'But what finally became of the little daffodil girl, Grandpa?' Mary asked thoughtfully.

'The little daffodil girl! Bless her heart!' The wrinkled old face lighted up with a tender smile.

The door opened softly, and a bright flame brought into relief a small figure crowned with a mass of silver curls, who entered the room. Her big blue eyes were alight with love as they rested on the little group in the shadowy corner. She came slowly across the floor, and on her arm she carried a big bunch of daffodils.

'The little daffodil girl!' The thin lips breathed the words softly. 'I brought her with me dear,' and he held out a hand toward Grandma.

Ode to Our Overshoes

*Week in, week out from morn 'till night,
Of overshaes we hear;
Although the sun is shining bright
And the skies are blue and clear,
And the ground as dry as dry can be,
Not muddy anywhere,
We ga an Sunday to the church,
Our overshoes go, too;
We hear the parson pray and preach,
We hear the singing too,
But when we think of overshoes,
We all feel sad and blue.
Toiling, rejoicing, sorrowing,
Onward through college we go;
Announcements made we hear each day,
They're for our good we know;
But when we hear of overshoes,
Our tears begin to flow.
But thanks to thee, most worthy Dean,
For the lesson thou hast taught!
We hate to wear our overshoes
But still we know we ought;
And so far you in after years
We'll have this pleasant thought.*

E. M. B.

*Sometimes when going down the street,
I see a youth I'd like to greet,
But when I glance down at my feet—!
Oh! darn those overshoes!*

Study Hour

Parody on "The Children's Hour"

*Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in our evening pleasure,
That is known as the Study Hour.*

*I hear in the study hall below me,
The tramp of many feet,
The sound from the windows that are opened,
And voices loud but sweet.*

*From my room I see in the twilight,
Descending the broad hall stairs,
Other girls laughing and dancing,
On to the hall with their cares.*

*A whisper, and then a silence
And I know by their downcast looks,
They are studying and cramming together,
To get knowledge from their books.*

“Lives of Great Wits All Remind Us”

Margaret McMillan to Lucille, discussing news items: “Listen, the other day I saw in the paper that Mr Brawley was pallbearer at a wedding.”

Lucy, to Little Cherry: “Oh yes, you are the ‘Vamp’ of Peace.”

Little Cherry: “No, I’m not the top of a shoe, ‘Cause that is what the dictionary says a ‘vamp’ is.”

Miss Susie Bobbitt: “If you don’t get quiet, first thing you know someone will get a letter and won’t get it.”

Mrs. Moore, to Lucie Lewis: “Lucie, it takes a lot to be a great artist. Are you willing to pay the price?”

Lucie: “I don’t know. You’ll have to see Father.”

Hattie May: “Miss Womble, I’m indebted to you for all I know.”

Miss Womble: “Pray, don’t mention such a trifle.”

Annie McCormick: “When I get married, my husband and I are going to France on our trousseau.”

Flora: “Did you know the 30th Division had sailed?”

Elfy: “How do you know?”

Flora: “I think Nellie Burgess saw it in the World Almanac.”

Old Girl, watching basketball game between Guilford and State College: “Gee, I wonder why those Guilford players fall down so much?”

New Girl: “Why it’s because they are not used to ‘hard-ware’ floors.”

Ruth Bowen, to bunch of girls who were going down to the Museum: “Say girls, where are you all going?”

Girls: “To the museum.”

Ruth: “Well, what is that? A place where you have speaking or music?”

On finding a postal from Delmar, Del., in a memory book, Martha turned to Mary Rozier and said: “Where is Delmardel?”

Miss McClelland: “What was in the Ark of the Israelites?”

Student: “Aarons’ rod, a pot of manna, and Moses’s memory book.”

Tyne (on seeing a row of boys at the Tank Camp lined up to be paid off): “Oh, I thought that was the receiving line.”

Katie Glenn: "You call a girls' school Alma Mater—what do you call a boys'—Alma Pater?"

Agnes at Auditorium: "Patty, look at that Naval Officer. He has on a badge of Honor."
Hattie May, looking up: "My mercy, it's a policeman."

Lucy Cooper asked Mary Steele if she knew her brother at Trinity.

Mary: "Is he a frat man?"

Lucy: "No, He's unusually thin."

In society – President: "Piano solo by Margaret Moore."

Helga Hampton: "Is she going to say it or play it?"

When the lights went out one night, during a storm, Mary C. said to Lena, "Mercy, are we supposed to be studying now?"

Ruth Bowen to Effie May: "You know we have to pay for company for the week end, and for company for dinner, but do you know how much it is for callers on Saturday nights? I have a date, and wanted to know the cost."

*I stood in the hall at midnight,
As the clocks were striking the hour,
And I thought of the possibilities
That lay within my power.*

*I stood stock still there, reflecting
Upon how to pass by the door,
Then I breathed deep a sigh of relief
As I heard the teacher snore.*

*In one of the rooms before me,
Ten feet up, and then to the east,
Was the place we had to celebrate
Our Tuesday midnight feast.*

*How often, oh, how often
A teacher had caught me there
I'd wished the floor would fall in,
And vanish with the air.*

*My heart was hot, I was hungry,
I knew I must go there;
Yet that which lay before me
Seemed greater than I could dare.*

*I made one terrific bold attempt
To pass that door of brown,
And had nearly succeeded, when horrors!
My foot slipped and I fell down.*

*And yet, I dared not call out,
As my head hit upon the floor,
I listened intently a moment
Praise be! I heard her snore.*

Before I came to Peace.

But for that mournful song.*
